reasonable period of time, with both buyer and seller being in possession of the pertinent facts and neither being under any compulsion to act.

Valuation of a business is not an exact science and ultimately depends upon what it is worth to a serious investor or buyer who may be prepared to pay substantial goodwill. This exercise may be carried out using various methodologies, the relative emphasis of each often varying with:

- Whether the entity is listed on a stock exchange
- Industry to which the Company belongs
- Past track record of the business and the ease with which the growth rate in cash flows to perpetuity can be estimated
- Extent to which industry and comparable company information are available.

The results of this exercise could vary significantly depending upon the basis used, the specific circumstances and professional judgment of the valuer. In respect of going concerns, certain valuation techniques have evolved over time and are commonly in vogue. These can be broadly categorized as follows:

1. Market Approach:

Comparable Company Transaction Multiple Method

Under this methodology, transaction multiples (Sales, EBITDA etc.,) of comparable companies are computed and applied to the business being valued in order to arrive at a multiple based valuation. The difficulty here is in the selection of a comparable company since it is rare to find two or more companies with the same product portfolio, size, capital structure, business strategy and profitability and accounting practices.

In this case, the company is engaged in Trading / manufacturing of Tyres and rubber products, where there are huge number of competitors in the specified industry. Comparing it with the multiples of already established companies, won't be appropriate given the size and nature of the current business, which need to be adjusted with various number of factors. Further, the purpose of the valuation is for swap of shares between the associated enterprises, wherein the market impact will get nullified in the overall scheme of the arrangement. Hence the Market Approach is ignored in this valuation.

2. Income Approach:

Maintainable Profit Method (Discounted Free Cash Flows – “DCF”) DCF uses the future free cash flows of the company discounted by the firm's weighted average cost of capital (the average cost of all the capital used in the business, including debt and equity), plus a risk factor measured by beta, to arrive at the present value.

Beta is an adjustment that uses historic stock market data to measure the sensitivity of the company's cash flow to market indices, for example, through business cycles.

The DCF method is a strong valuation tool, as it concentrates on cash generation potential of a business. This valuation method is based on the capability of a company to generate cash flows in the future. The free cash flows are projected for a certain number of years and then discounted at a discount rate that reflects a company's cost of capital and the risk associated with the cash flows it generates. DCF analysis is based mainly on the following elements:

- Projection of financial statements (key value driving factors)
- The cost of capital to discount the projected cash flows

The company is engaged in trading / manufacturing of Tyres and Rubber products and generates profit constantly. As the purpose of valuation is internal reorganization of the shares among the associated enterprises by swap of shares, the valuation of the shares under the income approach may not be appropriate. Hence, valuation under income approach is ignored for the purpose of valuation.

3. Cost Approach:

The value arrived at under this approach is based on the unaudited financial statements of the business and may be defined as Shareholders' Funds or Net Assets owned by the business. The balance sheet values are adjusted for any contingent liabilities that are likely to materialize.

The Net Asset Value is generally used as the minimum break-up value for the transaction since this methodology ignores the future return the assets can produce and is calculated using historical accounting data that does not reflect how much the business is worth to someone who may buy it as a going concern.

For internal reorganization within the associate enterprises, the best suited method will be Net Asset Valuation under cost approach. The true value as on current date can be arrived through cost method even though other method also can be calculated if the required details are received from the management of the company.

The fair value of the shares arrived through Net Asset Method of valuation under cost approach happens to be the best suited method for the given purpose of valuation. The detailed workings of which is given in Annexure A to our report.

Based on our working under cost approach, we have arrived at a Fair value of Rs. 18,034.72/- per Equity share of face value Rs.1000/- of the company under valuation.
